PREFACE

THE NEW CENTURY DICTIONARY had its origin in numerous requests made to the publishers for a dictionary based on their original Century Dictionary, but more moderate in compass and more popular in character. The original work, in its latest editions, runs to more than 8,500 three-column pages, and is bound, in the usual form, in ten large quarto volumes. It aims to define fully not only all the ordinary words and phrases of the English language, including obsolete words, dialectal and provincial words, and colloquial and slang words, but also the technical terms of all the various sciences, arts, trades, and professions; and it supplements the definitions proper by a great amount of related encyclopedic matter. The present work aims to define all the words of the language that are in ordinary use, or are likely to be met with in general speech or writing, a large number of the common phrases, and, in addition, the more important of the scientific and technical terms, or any of them that may be met with from time to time by the general reader. It is intended to meet the needs of the ordinary dictionary-user of the widest range of requirements, though not to be all-inclusive; and while it endeavors to deal with its entries briefly and simply, it does not hesitate to go into detail when a word or sense seems to merit the more extended treatment proper to the larger work. In making the new dictionary, the material for all the words of the original work falling within the scope of the new was taken as a basis; this material was then condensed and rewritten in accordance with the most recent information available; and finally thousands of new words and senses of all kinds, originating since the period of the World War, were added, these being gathered through a systematic reading of current periodicals and other literature, and defined, wherever necessary, with the help of experts in their particular fields. Thus the present dictionary may be said to be an abridged, condensed, and popular rendering of the original Century Dictionary, making available to a wider public the substance of the great mass of accumulated learning of the original work, as contributed by its large corps of scholars and experts; but it may also, because of the thorough rewriting of the original material, and of the great mass of new material added, be said to be a new work.

In this new dictionary, the established principles and preferences of the original dictionary, with respect to spelling, pronunciation, etc., have in the main been adhered to; but close attention has been paid throughout to the tendencies, preferences, and accepted usages of recent years, and where a ruling or method of the original work has been found to be at variance with the best usage of the present day, it has been modified or discarded in favor of what is more in accordance with the most recent developments of the language.

The vocabulary, while a selected one, is intended, as has been said, to answer a wide range of requirements. It includes the mass of the ordinary words of the language, a large proportion of the scientific and technical terms (although the ultratechnical terms have been regularly omitted), a great many of the common dialectal and provincial words, and numerous colloquial and slang words. The requirements of the scholar and the student have throughout been borne in mind, and to answer the needs of these, and of the general reader of the English classics, the more important obsolete and historical words and senses have been included. Much attention has been paid to words and senses of recent origin, in all fields, including war words, scientific terms, names of inventions, proprietary names adopted into general use, and borrowings from foreign languages. In dealing with all proprietary names, care has been taken to indicate that they are private property, and not ordinary words of the language.

In writing the definitions, the constant aim has been exactness and clearness, with avoidance, as far as possible, of the use of uncommon and technical terms. In the effort to make clear the definitions, especially of general words, and more particularly of those having a number of different senses, extensive use has been made of illustrative phrases and sentences showing ordinary usage, and, in addition to these, of illustrative quotations from British and American authors. Such phrases, sentences, and quotations are an important feature of the large Century Dictionary (in which the quotations alone aggregate about 200,000); but while a number of these have been retained in the present work, the greater part of those used are new, being invented or selected for the purposes of this work. Of the quotations, a few belong to the period from Chaucer down to the Elizabethan age; many to the period from the Elizabethan age to the close of the 18th century; a still larger number to the 19th century; and a fairly large number to the present century. The quotations in the first and second of these groups are intended primarily as an aid to the scholar and the student, although the general reader will be helped to a better understanding of many terms still in use by the extracts from the Bible, Shakspeare, Milton, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, and the other classics of the 17th and 18th centuries; the quotations in the third group are nearly all for still existing senses, and will, it is hoped, be of practical value to the general reader; the quotations in the last group are from a number of the best-known writers of recent years, and illustrate, in part, words and senses of late origin, toward an understanding of which they should prove useful. It may be added that every quotation employed has been verified from its source for its use in this work.

In general, the senses of each word are arranged, as far as possible, in the order of their derivation and development from the original source; and to make plain the course of development, a historical sense no longer in use, and of no particular importance otherwise, has often been retained to show the connection with the original source, or between one sense and another. It is thus possible, ordinarily, in running through a word, to trace the development from sense to sense, or from one group of senses to another group. The chief variation from this principle occurs with respect to technical senses preceded by an italic designation, these senses, for the most part, being placed after all the general senses.

The pronunciation system of the large Century Dictionary has met with favor because of its simplicity, and of the comparative ease with which the user is enabled to grasp the significance of its indications. This system has been adhered to in the present work, with a few slight modifications designed to make it even more useful. An abstract of the system is given across the foot of the pages of the Dictionary, and a more detailed Key to Pronunciation appears at the beginning of the work.

The etymologies of the original Century Dictionary are notable for their fullness; in them effort is directed to the presentation of a complete history of the words, which are traced back through earlier forms to their remotest known origin. In the present work the same elaboration of treatment has not been possible, but the aim has been to give an adequate, trustworthy, and useful statement of the origin and relations of many words of importance, and to give for most words at least an indication of any known or probable source. Where the derivation of a word is unknown, this is stated; where there are several suggested derivations, none of which bears unmistakable evidence of being the correct one, the origin is stated to be uncertain or obscure. For additional aid in this field, numerous prefixes, suffixes, and combining-forms have been entered in the vocabulary, to throw light on words already in existence and on new coinages that may appear hereafter, or to furnish guidance in the formation of new words that may be required to serve particular needs.

The pictorial illustrations in the text are in the main selected from the great collection used in the original work, which has been noted for its accuracy and general excellence. They have been chosen primarily for the help that they afford toward a better understanding of the definitions, each illustration being placed beside its definition, or as near as possible, and reference being made when necessary from the definition to the illustration. In addition to their usefulness in supplementing the definitions, it is felt that they possess a considerable degree of independent suggestiveness and artistic value.

The Century Dictionary, in its original and revised editions, was the work of a large staff of trained lexicographers assisted by many specialists representing all fields of knowledge. The new dictionary has been prepared by a staff trained in the methods of the makers of the original work, and endeavoring to maintain the traditions of their predecessors. To the labors of their predecessors they are under great obligation, for they have drawn heavily upon the materials of the original work in all departments of learning.

To all of the many persons who have served on the office staff of the new dictionary, and by their faithful and conscientious efforts have contributed to the production of the work, grateful acknowledgment is made. Of these, mention should be made in particular of Mr. Charles H. Fitch, who has had the general oversight of the scientific definitions, and has written much of the scientific matter; of Mr. Leo A. Kelly, who has given valuable aid in writing the definitions of the common words of the language; of Mr. O. F. Theis, who has contributed much to the definitions of both the common and the scientific words; and of Mr. Joseph M. Bachelor, who has aided most helpfully in various departments of the work.

A number of other persons connected with The Century Co. have been consulted from time to time during the making of the new dictionary, and have contributed special items of information or otherwise aided in the work of the editorial office. To these thanks are given: in particular, to Mr. W. Morgan Shuster, Mr. Gardner Hazen, Mr. George F. Thomson, Mr. J. L. Worley, Mr. Innis Brown, and Mr. F. V. Morley.

In connection with the definitions of words and senses of recent origin, valuable assistance has been received from a large number of scientists, inventors, manufacturers, original coiners of terms, and other authorities, to whose help is largely due such accuracy as may have been obtained. To give credit here to all of these would be impossible, but mention should be made of the assistance received from Professor Henry Norris Russell, of Princeton University; from Dr. George F. Kunz; from Dr. Henry D. Dakin; from Dr. Winford Lee Lewis; from Dr. F. G. Banting, of the University of Toronto; from Dr. A. A. Brill; from Professor Henry H. Goddard, of Ohio State University; from Dr. Frank H. Chittenden, Mr. Robert A. Young, and Mr. H. N. Vinall, of the United States Department of Agriculture; from Mr. Emile Berliner; from Mr. Elmer A. Sperry; from Dr. Lee de Forest; from Rear-Admiral Bradley A. Fiske; from Colonel B. W. Dunn, formerly of the United States Army; from Commander Charles Dennistoun Burney, formerly of the British Navy; from various officials of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, and of the General Electric Company; from the Holt Manufacturing Company; from the International Nickel Company; from the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company; from Messrs. Vickers, Limited; from Mr. Rudyard Kipling; from Mr. C. N. Chadbourn, of Minneapolis, Minn.; from Dr. Robert Underwood Johnson; from Rev. Henry H. Parker, of Honolulu; from Mr. D. Knickerbacker Boyd; from Mr. John Spargo; from Mr. A. Hamilton Gibbs; from Mr. Philip Moeller, of the Theatre Guild, of New York City; from Mr. Frank J. Wilstach; from Mr. Chesley R. Perry, secretary of the Rotary International; and from Mr. Fred. C. W. Parker, secretary of the Kiwanis Club International. To these, and to the many other persons who have contributed material or information, both the publishers and the editors of this work wish to express their sense of indebtedness and their thanks.

After the main vocabulary, or the Dictionary proper, there follow a number of separate sections of the work containing matter supplementary to the main vocabulary. These supplements, which have all been specially compiled for use in this work, have been based in part on material from the original Century Dictionary and its supplementary volume The Century Cyclopedia of Names, but they contain also a large amount of new matter.

The supplements appearing without designation as to compiler or editor were prepared by the editors of the main work and their associates. Of these, the supplement of Abbreviations in Common Use aims to give a practical selection, containing the abbreviations of a general nature which are met with most frequently. The supplement of Foreign Words, Phrases, etc., lists and explains a large number of foreign words, phrases, sentences, and quotations which occur occasionally in English use, but are for the most part scarcely adapted for inclusion in the Dictionary proper. Of the longer sentences and quotations, many are often quoted in various fragments, so that the complete form of the original sometimes seems desirable to make the subject clear. For a number of legal entries in this list, thanks are due to Mr. Ira H. Brainerd. The supplement of Biographical Names gives brief records of a large number of celebrities of all periods of history and in all fields of human activity, including many of those of the present day. The supplement of Tables of Measures, Weights, etc., lists in convenient form a number of tables useful for general reference.

The other supplements have been prepared by persons unconnected with the staff of the main work, but selected by the publishers because of special fitness for their tasks; to them the publishers have delegated full authority with regard to the selection and handling of the material in their respective sections of the work. Of these, the supplement of Synonyms, Antonyms, and Discriminations was compiled by Dr. Albert C. Baugh and Dr. Paul C. Kitchen, of the University of Pennsylvania. This supplement is by its nature intimately connected with the main vocabulary, and in its preparation the compilers have sought to provide material which will form a useful addition to the definitions of the Dictionary proper, both in lists of synonyms and antonyms and in discriminations of the senses of groups of words. The supplement of Business Terms was edited by Professor Edward Jones Kilduff, of the School of Commerce, Accounts, and Finance, of New York University. It aims to supply a glossary of common terms in the business field which will amplify and supplement the treatment of such terms in the Dictionary proper. The supplement of Proper Names was compiled under the direction of Mr. James Abbott. Its purpose is to give concise information concerning a large number of proper names exclusive of those in the fields of biography and geography. Some of these names might be placed equally well either here or in the main vocabulary, but the far greater number are by their nature marked off from the ordinary terms of the language; collectively they form a convenient group separate from the main vocabulary and from the biographical and geographical proper names which follow. The supplement of Geographical Names was prepared by Dr. Stephen Sargent Visser, of Indiana University. Its purpose is to give the spelling and pronunciation of all important names in its field, together with the location, size, and other facts of interest for the places, rivers, mountains, etc., themselves. Dr. Visser's own introduction to his supplement will be found at the beginning of the supplement itself.

Finally, sincere thanks are given to the J. S. Cushing Company, of Norwood, Mass., for the care and efficiency shown in the composition and proof-reading of the work, and for the unfailing courtesy with which members of that organization have met the long-continued demands made on their patience by the editors.

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION

a as in fat, man, pang, parrot.
ā as in fate, mane, dale.
ā as in far, father, palm, guard.
â as in fall, talk, naught.
â as in ask, fast, ant.
ā as in fare, hair, bear.

e as in net, pen, bless.
ē as in me, meet, meat.
é as in her, fern, herd, hurt.

i as in pin, it, biscuit.
ī as in pine, fight, file.

o as in not, on, gloss, forest, dog, god (a variable sound: in the speech of some, or in some words, approaching ā; in other cases, approaching ō).

ō as in note, poke, floor.
ö as in move, spoon, room.
ó as in nor, song, off.

u as in up, son, blood. ū as in mute, few, lute, tube (in many words, after l, t, etc., replaced in common speech by ö).

ú as in pull, book, could.

oi as in oil, joint, boy.
ou as in out, proud, now.

A single dot under a vowel in an un-accented syllable indicates shortening and lightening, without absolute loss of the distinctive quality. Thus:

ā as in aviary, prelate, captain.
ē as in elect, ablegate, episcopal.
ō as in agony, abrogate, democrat.
ö as in into, injury.
ū as in unite, singular, educate.

Two dots under a vowel in an unac-cented syllable indicate that its sound is obscured. Thus:

ä as in errant, publican, rural.
ä as in opera, peninsular.
ē as in ardent, prudence, towel.
ö as in actor, valor, idiot.
ū as in nature, feature, natural.

ch as in chip, much.
g as in go, bag.
s as in say, yes, vice.
th as in thin.
TH as in then.
y as in you, yet.

A mark (˘) under the consonants d, s, t, z, indicates that they are variable to j, sh, ch, zh. Thus:

d as in arduous, educate.
s as in nausea, appreciation.
t as in nature, adventure.
z as in aphasia, usury.

o as in French cloche, German schloss (a short or medium open o-sound, intermediate in character between ō and ó: not an English sound).

ü as in French menu, German kümmel, Müller.

ch as in Scotch loch, German ach.

ñ nasal n, as in French bonbon.

B as in Spanish Habana, Córdoba (sounded almost like v).

H as in Spanish jacal, gitana (a strongly aspirated, guttural h-sound).

' as in French faille, Swedish Strindberg (to indicate an obscure vowel-sound following a consonantal y-sound).

' denotes a primary accent, " a secondary accent. (A secondary accent is not ordinarily marked if at its regular interval of two syllables from the primary, or from another secondary.)

In the pronunciation of French words (except such as are regarded as at least partially Anglicized) no accents are indicated; such being the usage of French dictionaries, and better suited to the light, nearly uniform accentuation of French words than the use of marks customarily denoting the heavier tonic accent of English words.

GREEK CHARACTERS

For transliteration of the Greek characters used in the etymologies and elsewhere, see list under the entry Greek, on page 683.

SPECIAL EXPLANATIONS

The title-words of the Dictionary begin with a small (lower-case) letter, or with a capital, according to usage. When usage differs with the different senses of a word or entry, "[cap.]" for capital or "[l. c.]" for lower-case is inserted to indicate the fact, such an indication being understood to apply to all senses following, up to a differing indication or to a closing period.

Similarly, "pl." for plural or "sing." for singular, when preceding particular senses of a word, is understood to have force up to a differing indication or to a closing period.

Similarly, also, an italicized designation such as arch., med., physics, is understood to apply to following senses of a word up to some indication of change or to a closing period.

A single hyphen (-) in a title word in the Dictionary proper is used to indicate syllabication only; a double hyphen (=) in a title-word in the Dictionary proper, or a single hyphen (-) in the supplements, is used for a hyphen that is intended to be retained in the word.

- iks), n. The study of gliding or soaring flight; the science dealing with aërodones. — a'ër-o-do-net'ic, a.
- a-ër-o-drome (ä'ë-rō-drōm'), n. [In the first sense, < Gr. ἀεροδρόμος, traversing the air, < ἀήρ (āep-), air, + δρᾶμειν, run; in later uses, < Gr. ἀήρ + δρόμος, a running, course, race-course.] A flying-machine or aëroplane (esp. Langley's); also, an aviation course or ground; also, a hangar. — a'ër-o-drom'ic, a'ër-o-drom'i-cal (-drom'ik, -i-kəl), a.
- a-ër-o-dy-nam-ics (ä'ë-rō-dī-nam'iks), n. [See aëro-.] The dynamics of air or gases. — a'ër-o-dy-nam'ic, a'ër-o-dy-nam'i-cal, a.
- a-ër-o-en-gine (ä'ë-rō-en'jin), n. [See aëro-.] An engine for use in an aëroplane.
- a-ër-o-foil (ä'ë-rō-foīl'), n. [See aëro- and foil¹.] A supporting plane (flat or curved) of a flying-machine or gliding-machine.
- a-ër-o-go-ni-om-e-try (ä'ë-rō-gō-ni-om'e-tri), n. [See aëro- and goniometry.] Radiogoniometric measurement done from aircraft.
- a-ër-o-gram (ä'ë-rō-gram'), n. [See aëro- and -gram.] An aërographed message. — a'ër-o-graph' (-grāf'), v. t. [See -graph.] To telegraph by the wireless system. — a-ër-og-ra-phy (ä'ë-rōg'ra-fī), n. [See -graphy.] Description of the air or atmosphere. — a-ër-og-ra-pher, n. — a'ër-o-graph'ic, a'ër-o-graph'i-cal (-grāf'ik, -i-kəl), a.
- a-ër-o-gun (ä'ë-rō-gūn'), n. [See aëro-.] A gun for shooting at flying aëroplanes, etc.
- a-ër-o-hy-dro-plane (ä'ë-rō-hī'drō-plān), n. Same as hydro-aëroplane.
- a-ër-o-lite (ä'ë-rō-lit'), n. [= F. aérolithe, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + λίθος, stone.] A meteoric stone; a meteorite consisting mainly of stony matter. Also a'ër-o-lith' (-lith'). — a'ër-o-li-thol'o-gy (-li-thol'ō-jī), n. [See -logy.] The science of aërolites. — a'ër-o-lit'ic (-lit'ik), a.
- a-ër-ol-o-gy (ä'ë-rōl'ō-jī), n. [See aëro- and -logy.] The science of the air. — a-ër-o-log-ic, a-ër-o-log-i-cal (ä'ë-rō-lōj'ik, -i-kəl), a. — a-ër-ol'o-gist, n.
- a-ër-om-a-chy (ä'ë-rom'a-kī), n.; pl. -chies (-kiz). [Gr. ἀερομαχία, < ἀήρ (āep-), air, + μάχεσθαι, fight.] Fighting or a fight or battle in the air.
- a-ër-o-man-cy (ä'ë-rō-man'si), n. [F. aéromancie, < LL. aeromantia, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + μαντεία, divination.] Divination by the air or atmospheric phenomena; also, the forecasting of the weather.
- a-ër-o-me-chan-ics (ä'ë-rō-mē-kan'iks), n. [See aëro-.] The mechanics of air or gases. — a'ër-o-me-chan'ic, a'ër-o-me-chan'i-cal, a.
- a-ër-o-m-e-ter (ä'ë-rom'e-tēr), n. [See aëro- and -meter.] An instrument for finding the weight, density, etc., of air or other gases. — a-ër-om'e-try, n. [See -metry.] The science of measuring air; the science of pneumatics. — a-ër-o-met-ric (ä'ë-rō-met'rik), a.
- a-ër-o-mo-tor (ä'ë-rō-mō'tor), n. [See aëro-.] A motor for propelling an aëroplane or the like; also, any motor-driven aircraft.
- a-ër-o-nat (ä'ë-rō-nat'), n. [F. aéronat, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + L. natare, swim, float.] A dirigible or motor-driven balloon.
- a-ër-o-naut (ä'ë-rō-nāt'), n. [F. aéronaute, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + ναύτης, sailor.] One who navigates the air, as in an airship or flying-machine. — a'ër-o-nau'tic, a'ër-o-nau'ti-cal, a. Pertaining to an aëronaut, or to aëronautics. — a'ër-o-nau'ti-cal-ly, adv. — a'ër-o-nau'tics, n. The science or art of aërial navigation. — a'ër-o-naut'ism, n. Aërial navigation.
- a-ër-o-nef (ä'ë-rō-nef'), n. [F. aéronef, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + F. nef, < L. navis, ship.] An airship; a flying-machine.
- a-ër-o-phyte (ä'ë-rō-fit'), n. [See aëro- and -phyte.] In bot., an air-plant or epiphyte.
- a-ër-o-plane (ä'ë-rō-plān'), n. [See aëro- and plane².] A plane (flat or curved) forming part of a flying-machine or gliding-machine and supporting it in the air; also, a flying-machine thus supported in flight and driven by a motor. — a'ër-o-plane', v. i.; -planed, -planing. To aviate in an aëroplane. — a'ër-o-plan'er, a'ër-o-plan'ist (-plā'nēr, -nist), n.
- a-ër-o-scep-sis (ä'ë-rō-skep'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + σκέψις, viewing, perception.] In zool., the faculty of aëroscopy. Also a'ër-o-scep'sy.
- a-ër-os-co-py (ä'ë-ros'kō-pī), n. [Gr. ἀεροσκοπία, < ἀήρ (āep-), air, + σκοπία, see -scopy.] In zool., perception of atmospheric conditions, as by insects and snails. — a-ër-o-scop-ic (ä'ë-rō-skop'ik), a.
- a-ër-o-sid-er-ite (ä'ë-rō-sid'ē-rīt), n. [See aëro- and siderite.] A meteorite consisting essentially of metallic iron. — a'ër-o-sid'ēr-o-lite (ē-rō-lit), n. [See siderolite.] A meteorite containing both iron and stone.
- a-ër-o-stat (ä'ë-rō-stat'), n. [F. aérostāt, < Gr. ἀήρ (āep-), air, + στατός, standing.] An apparatus, as a balloon or a flying-machine, capable of floating in the air; also, an aëronaut. — a'ër-o-stat'ic, a'ër-o-stat'i-cal, a. Pertaining to aërostatics or to aërostation. — a'ër-o-stat'ics, n. The science of the equilibrium of air and other elastic fluids, and of the equilibrium of bodies sustained in them. — a'ër-o-sta'tion (-stā'shōn), n. [F. aérostation.] Aërial navigation.
- a-ër-o-tech-ni-cal (ä'ë-rō-tek'ni-kəl), a. [See aëro-.] Pertaining to the art that deals with machines or appliances for navigating the air and with the problems connected with their use.
- a-ër-o-ther-a-peu-tics (ä'ë-rō-ther-a-pū'tiks), n. [See aëro-.] That branch of therapeutics which deals with the curative use of air or of artificially prepared atmospheres.
- æ-ru-gi-nous (ē-rō'jī-nus), a. [L. æruginosus, < æru-go, verdigris, < æs, copper.] Of or like verdigris.
- a-ër-y¹ (ä'ēr-i), a. Aërial; airy; ethereal. [Poetic.]
- æ-ry² (ä'ri or ē'ri), n.; pl. aeries (-riz). [OF. F. aïre, prob. < L. area, open space.] The nest of a bird of prey; hence, any nest, habitation, or position aloft; also, a brood, as in a nest.

a-nal-o-gous (ā-nal'ō-gus), a. [L. analogus, < Gr. ἀνάλογος, proportionate, < ἀνά, according to, + λόγος, proportion, due relation: see Logos.] Corresponding or comparable (to) in some respect, though unlike as a whole; having analogy; in biol., corresponding in function but not in type of structure and in origin (as, the wing of a bird and the wing of a butterfly are analogous). — a-nal'o-gous-ly, adv. — a-nal'o-gous-ness, n.

an-a-logue (an'ā-log), n. [F., < L. analogus: see analogous.] Something analogous; in biol., an organ or part which is analogous to another.

a-nal-ogy (ā-nal'ō-jī), n.; pl. -gies (-jiz). [L. analogia, < Gr. ἀναλογία, < ἀνάλογος: see analogous.] A mathematical proportion, or equality of ratios; hence, a correspondence between things unlike in themselves (as, to trace an analogy between the heart and a machine); a ground of comparison in some respect, without actual or complete resemblance; the relation of being analogous; in biol., analogous relation or correspondence.

an-al-pha-bete (an-al'fa-bēt), n. [Gr. ἀναλόφθητος, not knowing one's a-b-c, < ἀν- priv. + ἄλφα, alpha (a), + βῆτα, beta (b).] A totally illiterate person. — an-al-pha-bet'ic (-bet'ik), a.

an-a-lyse (an'ā-liz), etc. See analyze, etc.

a-nal-y-sis (ā-nal'yi-sis), n.; pl. -yses (-i-sēz). [ML., < Gr. ἀνάλυσις, < ἀναλύνειν, unloose, undo, < ἀνά, up, + λύνειν, loose.] Resolution or separation of a whole, whether a material substance or any matter of thought, into its constituent elements (opposed to synthesis); esp., this process as a method of studying the nature of a thing or of determining its essential features; also, a brief presentation of essential features; an outline or summary, as of a book; a synopsis; in math., algebraic reasoning, esp. as applied to geometry; also, treatment by the calculus; in chem., intentionally produced decomposition or separation of a substance into its ingredients or elements, as to find their kind or quantity; hence, the ascertainment of the kind or amount of one or more of the constituents of a substance, whether actually obtained in separate form or not.

(variable) d as d or j, s as s or sh, t as t or ch, z as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; ch, Sc. loch; ñ, F. bonbon; ', primary accent; ˆ, secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

an-a-lyst (an-ā-līst), n. [F. analyste, < analyser, E. analyze.] One who analyzes; one versed in analysis.

an-a-lyt-ic, an-a-lyt-i-cal (an-ā-līt'ik, -i-kāl), a. [Gr. ἀνάλυτικός.] Pertaining to or proceeding by analysis (opposed to synthetic); in math., treated by algebra (as geometry: see geometry) or by the calculus; in philol., characterized by the use of separate particles and auxiliary words rather than inflections, as some languages, expressions, etc. (see synthetic).—an-a-lyt'i-cal-ly, adv.—an-a-lyt'ics, n. Mathematical or algebraic analysis.

an-a-lyz-a-ble, an-a-lys-a-ble (an-ā-lī-zā-bl), a. Capable of being analyzed.

an-a-lyze, an-a-lyse (an-ā-līz), v. t.; -lyzed or -lysed, -lyzing or -lysing. [F. analyser, < analyse, analysis, < ML. analysis: see analysis.] To resolve into elements or constituent parts; determine the elements or essential features of; examine by analysis; in math., to treat algebraically or by the calculus.—an-ā-ly-za'tion, an-ā-ly-sa'tion (-lī-zā'shən), n.—an-ā-lyz-er, an-ā-lys-er (-lī-zēr), n.

an-am-ne-sis (an-am-nēs'is), n. [NL., < Gr. ἀνάμνησις, < ἀνα-, back, + μνήσθαι, remember.] The recalling of things past; recollection; reminiscence.—an-am-nes'tic (-nes'tik), a.—an-am-nes'ti-cal-ly, adv.

an-a-mor-pho-scope (an-ā-mōr'fō-skōp), n. [See anamorphosis and -scope.] A device, as a curved mirror, for giving a correct image of a picture or the like that is distorted by anamorphosis.

an-a-mor-pho-sis (an-ā-mōr'fō-sis), n.; pl. -phoses (-fō-sēz). [NL., < Gr. ἀναμόρφωσις, a forming anew, < ἀναμορφῶν, form anew: cf. metamorphosis.] A kind of drawing presenting a distorted image which appears in natural form under certain conditions, as when reflected from a curved mirror; the method of producing such drawings; in bot., anomalous change of form; in bot. and zool., gradual change of form, generally ascending, in successive members of a group of plants or animals.

bin-o-cle (bin'ō-kl), n. [F. binocle, < L. bini, two at a time, + oculus, eye.] A telescope, field-glass, or the like, adapted for the use of both eyes at once.

bi-noc-u-lar (bi-nok'ū-lār or bi-). [L. bini, two at a time, + oculus, eye.] I. a. Pertaining to or employing both eyes; suited for the simultaneous use of both eyes, as certain telescopes, etc. II. n. A binocular optical instrument, as a field-glass.—bi-noc-u-lar'i-ty (-lar'i-ti), n.—bi-noc'u-lar-ly, adv.

bi-no-mi-al (bi-nō'mi-āl). [ML. binomius, for L. binominis, < bi-, two, + nomen, name.] I. a. In alg., consisting of or pertaining to two terms connected by the sign + or –; in zool. and bot., noting a name comprising two terms (designating genus and species), or characterized by the use of such names. II. n. In alg., a binomial expression (as a + b); in zool. and bot., a binomial name (as Felis leo, the lion).—bi-no'mi-al-ism, n. In zool. and bot., the binomial method of nomenclature.—bi-no'mi-al-ly, adv.

bi-nom-i-nal (bi-nom'i-nāl), a. [L. binominis: see binomial.] Having or using two names, as of genus and species in scientific nomenclature.

bi-nu-cle-ar (bi-nū'klē-ār), a. [See bi-.] Having two nuclei. Also bi-nu'cle-ate (-āt).

bio- Form of Gr. bios, life, used in combination.

Binnacle.

(variable) d as d or j, s as s or sh, t as t or ch, z as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; ch, Sc. loch; ñ, F. bonbon; ¹, primary accent; ², secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

bi-o-blast (bi'ō-blast), n. [From bio- + -blast.] In biol., a formative cell; also, according to some authorities, a hypothetical unit of protoplasm practically equivalent to a biophore. — bi-o-blas'tic, a.

bi-o-cel-late (bi-os'e-lāt), a. [See bi-.] Having two ocelli or eye-like spots.

bi-o-chem-is-try (bi'ō-kem'is-tri), n. [See bio-.] The chemistry of living matter; physiological chemistry. — bi-o-chem'ic, bi-o-chem'i-cal, a. — bi-o-chem'ist, n.

bi-o-dy-nam-ics (bi'ō-dī-nam'iks), n. [See bio-.] The branch of biology that treats of vital force or energy, or of the action of living organisms: opposed to biostatistics. — bi'o-dy-nam'ic, bi'o-dy-nam'i-cal, a.

bi-o-gen (bi'ō-jen), n. [See bio- and -gen.] In biol., one of the smallest theoretical units of living substance: a term practically equivalent to biophore.

bi-o-gen-e-sis (bi'ō-jen'e-sis), n. [See bio-.] The production of living beings from living beings (opposed to abiogenesis); also, the doctrine that life is produced only from living matter. — bi'o-ge-net'ic (-jē-net'ik), a. Pertaining to biogenesis. — bi'o-ge-net'i-cal-ly, adv. — bi-og'e-ny (-oj'e-ni), n. Biogenesis.

bi-o-ge-o-graphy (bi'ō-jē-ō-grā-fī), n. [See bio-.] The branch of biology that treats of the geographical distribution of living things. — bi'o-ge-o-graph'ic, bi'o-ge-o-graph'i-cal (-jē-ō-grāf'ik, -i-kal), a.

bi-o-graph (bi'ō-grāf), n. [See bio- and -graph.] An instrument for projecting moving pictures on a screen.

bi-og-ra-pher (bi-ō-grā-fēr), n. [See biography.] A writer of biography. — bi-o-graph'ic, bi-o-graph'i-cal (-ō-grāf'ik, -i-kal), a. Pertaining to biography. — bi-o-graph'i-cal-ly, adv. — bi-og'ra-pher, n. A biographer. — bi-og'ra-phize (-fiz), v. t.; -phized, -phizing. To write a biography of (a person, etc.).

bi-og-ra-phy (bi-ō-grā-fī), n.; pl. -phies (-fiz). [NL. biographia, < LGr. βιογραφία, < Gr. bios, life, + γράφειν, write.] A written account of a person's life; also, writing that treats of individual lives.

bi-o-log-ic, bi-o-log-i-cal (bi'ō-loj'ik, -i-kal), a. [See biology.] Pertaining to biology. — bi-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. — bi-ol'o-gist (-ol'ō-jist), n. One versed in biology.

bi-ol'o-gy (bi-ol'ō-jī), n. [F. biologie or G. biologie, < Gr. bios, life, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak.] The science of life or living matter in all its forms and phenomena, often esp. with reference to origin, growth, reproduction, structure, etc.

bi-o-mag-net-ism (bi'ō-mag'ne-tizm), n. [See bio-.] Animal magnetism; mesmerism. — bi'o-mag-net'ic, a.

bi-o-met-ric, bi-o-met-ri-cal (bi'ō-met'rik, -ri-kal), a. [See biometry.] Pertaining to biometry. — bi-o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv. — bi'o-me-tri'cian (-me-trish'an), bi-o-met'ri-cist (-sist), n. One versed in biometry. — bi-o-met'rics, n. Biometry.

bi-om-e-try (bi-om'e-tri), n. [See bio- and -metry.] The measurement of life; the calculation of the probable duration of human life; also, the branch of biological science concerned with quantitative statistics of the properties and phenomena of living things.

bi-on (bi'on), n. [G., < Gr. bios, life.] In biol., a unit or individual which is functionally or physiologically independent: contrasted with morphon.

bi-o-nom-ics (bi'ō-nom'iks), n. [See bio- and cf. economics.] That branch of biology which treats of the relations between organisms and their environment; ecology. — bi-o-nom'ic, bi-o-nom'i-cal, a. — bi-on'o-mist (-on'ō-mist), n.

bi-on-o-my (bi-on'ō-mi), n. [See bio- and -nomy.] The science of the laws of life, or of living functions.

bi-o-phore (bi'ō-fōr), n. [See bio- and -phore.] In biol., the vital unit, as a cell, or as the hypothetical primary constituent of germ-plasm.

bi-o-plasm (bi'ō-plazm), n. [See bio- and -plasm.] In biol., living or germinal matter; living protoplasm. — bi-o-plas'mic (-plaz'mik), a. — bi'o-plast (-plast), n. [See -plast.] In biol., a particle of bioplasm; a germinal cell. — bi-o-plas'tic, a.

bi-o-scope (bi'ō-skōp), n. [See bio- and -scope.] A device for projecting moving pictures on a screen.

bi-o-stat-ics (bi'ō-stat'iks), n. [See bio- and -static.] The branch of biology that treats of the structure of organisms in relation to their functions: opposed to biodynamics. — bi-o-stat'ic, bi-o-stat'i-cal, a.

bi-o-ta (bi-ō'tā), n. [NL., < Gr. bios, life.] The animal and plant life of a given region or period, taken collectively.

bi-o-tax-y (bi'ō-tak-si), n. [See bio- and -taxy.] The classification of living organisms.

bi-ot-ic, bi-ot-i-cal (bi-ō'tik, -i-kal), a. [Gr. βιωτικός, < bios, life: see quick.] Pertaining to life; vital. — bi-ot'ics, n. The science of vital activities and powers.

bi-o-tite (bi'ō-tit), n. [From J. B. Biot (1774–1862), French physicist.] A black or dark-colored mica. — bi-o-tit'ic (-tit'ik), a.

bip-a-rous (bip'a-rus), a. [L. bi-, two, + parere, bring forth.] Bringing forth two at a birth.

bi-par-ti-ble (bi-pār'ti-bl), a. [See bi-.] Divisible into two parts. Also bi-par'tile (-til).

bi-par-tite (bi-pār'tit), a. [L. bipartitus, pp. of bipartire, < bi-, two, + partire, divide.] Divided into two parts; in bot., divided into two parts nearly to the base, as a leaf; in law, being in two corresponding parts, or counterparts, as a contract or indenture. — bi-par'ti'tion (-pār-tish'on), n.

bi-par-ti-zan, bi-par-ti-san (bi-pār'ti-zan), a. [See bi-.] Of or pertaining to two groups of partisans; representing two parties (as, a bipartisan candidate); composed of persons belonging some to one and some to the other of two parties (as, a bipartisan election-board).

bi-ped (bi'ped), n. [L. bipes (biped), two-footed, < bi-, two, + pes (ped-), foot.] A two-footed animal. — bi'-ped-al (-ped-al or -pē-dal), a.

bi-pet-a-lous (bi-pet'a-lus), a. [See bi-.] In bot., having two petals.

bi-pin-nate (bi-pin'at), a. [See bi-.] In bot., pinnate, as a leaf, with the divisions also pinnate. — bi-pin-nat'i-fid

(-pi-nat'i-fid), a. In bot., pinnatifid, as a leaf, with the divisions also pinnatifid. — bi-pin-nat-i-lo'bate (-lō'bāt), a. In bot., of a leaf, pinnatilobate, with the divisions also pinnatilobate. — bi-pin-nat-i-par'tite (-pār'tit), a. In bot., of a leaf, pinnatipartite, with the divisions also pinnatipartite. — bi-pin-nat'i-sect (-sekt), a. In bot., of a leaf, pinnatisect, with the divisions also pinnatisect.

bi-plane (bi'plān). [See bi- and plane.] I. n. An aeroplane with two supporting planes, one above the other. II. a. Pertaining to a biplane or its two supporting planes; having or consisting of two supporting planes.

bi-po-lar (bi-pō'lār), a. [See bi-.] Having two poles; pertaining to or found at both poles. — bi-po-lar'i-ty (-pō-lār'i-ti), n.

Bi-pont, Bi-pon-tine (bi'pont, bi-pon'tin), a. [NL. Bipontium, tr. of G. Zweibrücken, 'two bridges'.] Of or pertaining to Zweibrücken in Bavaria: applied to certain editions of the classics the printing of which was begun there in 1779.

bi-py-ram-i-dal (bi-pi-ram'i-dal), a. [See bi-.] In crystal., having the form of two pyramids set base to base.

bi-quad-rate (bi-kwod'rāt), n. [See bi-.] In math., the fourth power, or the square of the square. — bi-quad-rat'ic (-rat'ik), n.

I. a. Of or pertaining to a fourth power: as, a biquadratic equation (one in which the highest power of the unknown quantity is the fourth). II. n. The fourth power of a number; also, a biquadratic equation.

bi-ra-di-ate, bi-ra-di-at-ed (bi-rā'di-āt, -ā-ted), a. [See bi-.] Having two rays.

bi-ra-mose, bi-ra-mous (bi-rā'mōs, -mus), a. [See bi- and ramose.] Having, or consisting of, two branches.

birch (bērč), n. [AS. birce = G. birke; akin to Skt. bhūrja, kind of birch.] Any tree or shrub of the genus Betula, comprising species with smooth, laminated outer bark and close-grained wood; also, the wood; also, a rod or a bunch of twigs from the tree, for-

Bipinnate Leaf.

Branch of Low Birch (Betula pumila).

fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, mōve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errant, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; тн, then; y, you;

merly much used to chastise with, as in schools.—birch, v. t. To chastise with a birch rod.—birch/en, a. Of or pertaining to birch; consisting of or made of birch; also, of or pertaining to the birch used in chastising (as, “unless you had the same birchen argument to convince me”: Fielding’s “Tom Jones,” v. 11).

bird (bêrd), n. [AS. brīd, young bird.] The young of any member of the feathered tribe†; the young of various other animal†; a young person (now rare); any of the Aves, a class of warm-blooded vertebrates having a body more or less completely covered with feathers, and the fore limbs so modified as to form wings by means of which most species fly in the air; among sportsmen, any of various game-birds, as a partridge; also, a clay pigeon; also, a person or thing notable on account of some characteristic, as excellence, eccentricity, etc. (slang).—bird of paradise, any bird of the family Paradisæidæ, of New Guinea, etc., noted for magnificent plumage, as Paradisæa apoda, one of the most beautiful species.—bird of passage, a bird that migrates at the change of seasons. Also fig.—bird of prey, any of a group of predaceous, flesh-eating birds comprising the eagles, hawks, vultures, owls, etc., and commonly regarded as constituting the order Raptores.—bird, v. i. To catch or shoot birds.—bird’s cage, n. A cage for a bird.—bird’s call, n. The call or cry of a bird, or a sound in imitation of it; also, an instrument for imitating the call.—bird’s lime, n. A viscous substance smeared on twigs to catch small birds that light on it. Also fig.—bird’s lime, v. t. To smear or catch with or as with bird-lime.—bird’s man (-man), n.; pl. -men. An aviator.—bird’s seed, n. Small seed, esp. that of a grass, Phalaris canariensis, used as food for birds.—bird’s eye. I. a. Seen comprehensively, as by a bird flying above; hence, general; not entering into details; also, having markings or spots resembling birds’ eyes (as, bird’s-eye maple; bird’s-eye diaper). II. n. Any of various plants with small, round, bright-colored flowers, as a primrose, Primula farinosa, or the germander speedwell, Veronica chamædrys.—bird’s foot, n. Any of various plants whose leaves, flowers, or pods resemble or suggest the foot or claw of a bird, esp. plants of the fabaceous genus Ornithopus, which have claw-like pods.—bird’s nest, n. The nest of a bird; specif., the nest of swifts of the genus Collocalia, consisting largely of the inspissated saliva of the birds, used esp. by the Chinese for making soup (‘edible bird’s nest’); also, a name for various plants, as the wild carrot.—bird’s nest, v. i. To search for birds’ nests.—bird’s woman, n.; pl. -women (-wim’en). An aviatrix.

bi-refr-ingent (bi-rē-frin’jēnt), a. [See bi-.] Having the power of double refraction.—bi-refr-ingence, n.

bi-reme (bi-rēm), n. [L. biremis, < bi-, two, + remus, oar.] A galley having two banks or tiers of oars.

bi-ret-ta (bi-ret’ä), n. [It. ber- car-a-bi-neer, car-a-bi-nier (kar'a-bi-nēr'), n. [F. carabinier (= It. carabiniere), < carabine: see carbine, and cf. carbineer.] A soldier, usually of the cavalry, armed with the carbine.

Carabao.

car-a-cal (kar'a-kal), n. [F. caracal, < Turk. qarah, black, + gulaq, ear.] A small feline animal, Lynx caracal, of Asia and Africa, of a reddish-brown color, and having a tuft of long black hair at the tip of each ear.

Caracal.

ca-ra-ca-ra (kā-rā-kā'rā), n. [S. Amer. name; imit. of its cry.] Any of certain culture-like birds of the falcon family (subfamily Polyborinæ) of the warmer parts of America.

car-ack, car-rack (kar'āk), n. [OF. carrake (F. caraque), < ML. carraca; origin uncertain.] A large, armed merchant vessel, esp. Spanish or Portuguese, of former times.

car-a-cole (kar'a-kōl), n. [F. caracole, < Sp. caracol, snail, winding staircase, wheeling movement.] A spiral staircase;

(variable) đ as d or j, š as s or sh, ț as t or ch, ž as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; čh, Sc. loch; ñ, F. bonbon; †, primary accent; ‡, secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

also, a half-turn executed by a horseman in riding.—car'-a-cole, v. i.; -coled, -coling. To execute caracoles; wheel; prance: as, "Now caracol'd the steeds in air" (Scott's "Bridal of Triermain," ii. 19).

car-a-cul (kar'a-köl or -kul), n. [Russ.] The skin of the very young of certain Asiatic or Russian sheep, dressed as a fur, resembling astrakhan, but with a flatter, looser curl. ca-rafe, ca-raffe (ka-räf'), n. [F. carafe, < It. caraffa; prob. from Ar.] A glass water-bottle.

car'a-geen, car'a-gheen, n. See carrageen.

car-am-bo-la (kar-am-bō'lā), n. [Pg.] The acid fruit of a small East Indian tree, Averrhoa carambola; also, the tree itself.

car-am-bole (kar'am-böl), n. and v. See carom.

car-a-mel (kar'a-mel), n. [F. caramel, < Sp. caramelo.] Burnt sugar, used for coloring and flavoring food, etc.; also, a kind of candy, commonly in small blocks, made from sugar, butter, milk, etc.—car'a-mel, v. t. or i. To caramelize.—car'a-mel-ize (-iz), v. t. or i.; -ized, -izing. [= F. caraméliser.] To convert or to be converted into caramel.—car'a-mel-i-za'tion (-i-zä'shön), n.

car-an-goid (ka-rang'goid), a. [NL. Caranx, the typical genus (cf. Sp. carangue, a West Indian flatfish): see -oid.] Belonging to or resembling the Carangidae, a family of fishes including the cavally, pompano, pilot-fish, etc.

car-a-pace (kar'a-pās), n. [F., < Sp. carapacho.] The shell of a turtle, etc., esp. the upper shell. Also car'a-pax (-paks).

car-at (kar'at), n. [F. carat, < It. carato, < Ar. qirāt, < Gr. κεράτιον, carob bean, carat, dim. of képas, horn.] A twenty-fourth part (used in expressing the fineness of gold, pure gold being 24 carats fine); also, a unit of weight for precious stones (equal to about 3 grains troy).

car-a-van (kar'a-van or kar-a-van'), n. [F. caravane, < Pers. kārwān.] A company of merchants or others traveling together, as for safety, esp. over deserts, etc., in Asia or Africa; any similar band of travelers; also, a large covered vehicle for passengers or goods; a van; a house on wheels.

car-a-van-sa-ry

(kar-a-van'sa-ri), n.; pl. -ries (-riz).

[Pers. kārwān-sarāi: cf. serāi.]

In the East, a kind of inn for the accommodation of caravans; hence, any large inn or hotel. Also car-a-van'se-rai (-se-ri).

car-a-vel (kar'a-vel), n. [Sp. and Pg. caravela, ult. < Gr.

κάραβος, kind of light ship.] A kind of small ship formerly used by the Spaniards and Portuguese; also, a Turkish man-of-war.

car-a-way (kar'a-wā), n. [Ar. karawīyā: cf. L. careum, Gr. κάρων.]

An apiaceous plant, Carum carui, bearing aromatic seed-like fruit ('caraway-seeds') used in cookery and medicine and yielding a volatile oil; also, the fruit or seeds.

car-ba-mate (kär'bā-māt), n. In chem., a salt of carbamic acid.

car-bam-ic (kär-bam'ik), a. [From carbonic + amide.] In chem., noting or pertaining to an organic acid, CONH_2OH , not occurring in the free state, but known in the form of salts, esp. that of ammonium.

car-ba-mide (kär'bā-mid or -mid), n. [From carbon + amide.] In chem., urea.

car-bido (kär'bid or -bid), n. In chem., a compound of carbon with a more electropositive element or radical.

car-bine (kär'bin), n. [F. carabine (= It. carabina), orig. a small harquebus, < carabin, a mounted soldier armed with this weapon: origin uncertain.] A short rifle (or, formerly, musket) adapted for cavalry.—car-bi-neer' (-bi-nēr'), n. [Cf. carabineer.] A soldier armed with a carbine.

carbo- Form of carbon used in combination.

car-bo-hy-drate (kär-bō-hi'drät), n. [See carbo-.] In chem., any of a class of carbon compounds, including starch, sugar, and cellulose, which contain twice as many hydrogen as oxygen atoms.

car-bo-late (kär'bō-lät), n. In chem., a salt of carbolic acid.—car'bō-lat-ed (-lät-ted), a. Containing carbolic acid.

car-bol-ic (kär-bol'ik), a. [L. carbo, coal, + oleum, oil.] Pertaining to or derived from carbon or coal: as, carbolic acid ($\text{C}_6\text{H}_5\text{OH}$, obtained from the heavy oil of coal-tar: used as a disinfectant, antiseptic, etc.).—car'bō-lize (-bō-liz), v. t.; -lized, -lizing. To treat with carbolic acid.

car-bon (kär'bön), n. [F. carbone, < L. carbo(n), coal, charcoal.] Chem. sym., C; at. wt., 12.005. A widely distributed element which forms organic compounds in combination with hydrogen, oxygen, etc., and which occurs in a pure state as the diamond and as graphite, and in an impure state as charcoal; also, a rod or plate composed in part of carbon, used in arc-lamps, batteries, etc.—carbon dioxide, a heavy gas, CO_2 , present in the atmosphere and formed during respiration: used in the manufacture of effervescent drinks, as soda-water, etc.—carbon monoxide, a colorless, odorless, very poisonous gas, CO, which burns with a pale-blue flame, and is formed when carbon burns with an insufficient supply of air.—carbon process, a method of making photographic prints by the use of a pigment, such as carbon, contained in sensitized gelatin.—car-bo-na'-ceous (-bō-nä'shius), a. Of, like, or containing carbon.

car-bo-na-do¹ (kär-bō-nä'dō), n.; pl. -does or -dos (-dōz). [Sp. carbonada, < L. carbo(n), coal.] A piece of meat or the like scored and broiled.—car-bo-na'-do¹, v. t.; -doed, -doing. To score and broil; also, to slash or hack.

car-bo-na-do² (kär-bō-nä'dō), n.; pl. -does (-dōz). [Pg., < carbone, carbon.] An opaque, dark-colored, massive form of diamond, found chiefly in Brazil, and used for drills; black diamond.

Car-bo-na-ro (kär-bō-nä'rō), n.; pl. -ri (-rē). [It., 'charcoal-burner'.] A member of a former secret political society of revolutionary aims in Italy and France, originating in southern Italy early in the 19th century as a movement against the French rule: usually in pl.—Car-bo-na'-rism, n.

car-bo-nate (kär'bō-nāt), n. In chem., a salt of carbonic acid.—car'bō-nate, v. t.; -nated, -nating. To form into a carbonate; charge or impregnate with carbonic-acid gas (carbon dioxide).—car'bō-na'tion (-nä'shön), n.

car-bon-ic (kär-bōn'ik), a. Of or containing carbon: as, carbonic acid (an acid, H_2CO_3 , whose salts are carbonates; also, carbon dioxide); carbonic-acid gas (carbon dioxide).

car-bo-nif-er-ous (kär-bō-ni'ē-rus). [L. carbo(n), coal, + ferre, bear.] I. a. Coal-bearing; [cap.] noting or pertaining to a geological period or a system of rocks preceding the Permian. II. n. [cap.] The Carboniferous period or system.

car-bon-ite (kär'bō-nit), n. An explosive used in blasting, containing nitroglycerin and various other substances, such as powdered wood and sodium nitrate.

car-bon-ize (kär'bō-niz), v. t.; -ized, -izing. To convert into carbon, as by partial combustion; cover with carbon; combine with carbon.—car'bōn-i-za'tion (-bō-ni-zä'shön), n.—car'bōn-iz-er (-bō-ni-zēr), n.

car-bon-pa-per (kär'bōn-pā'pēr), n. Paper faced with a preparation of carbon or other material, used between two sheets of plain paper in order to reproduce upon the lower sheet that which may be written upon the upper.

car-bon-yl (kär'bō-nil), n. [From carbon + -yl.] In chem., a bivalent radical, CO, composed of one atom of carbon and one of oxygen.—carbonyl chloride, in chem., a gas, COCl_2 , formed by the action of light on a mixture of carbon monoxide and chlorine.—car-bon-yl'ic, a.

Interior of Caravansary at Aleppo.

Caravel, 15th century.

fat, fāte, fär, fäll, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pine; not, nōte, möve, nór; up, lüte, püll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, elect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardēt, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; ʔH, then; y, you;

car-bo-run-dum (kär-bq-run'dum), n. [From carbon + corundum.] Silicon carbide, SiC, an important abrasive produced in the electric furnace. [Proprietary name.]

car-box-yl (kär-bok'sil), n. [From carb(on) + ox(ygen) + -yl.] In chem., a univalent radical or group containing carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen (COOH), present in organic acids. — car-box-yl-a'tion (-bok-si-lä'shön), n. The introduction of a carboxyl group into a compound. — car-box-yl'ic, a.

car-boy (kär'boi), n. [Pers. qarābah, large flagon.] A large globular glass bottle, esp. one protected by basketwork or a wooden box, as for containing acids.

car-bun-cle (kär'bung-kl), n. [OF. carbuncle, < L. carbunculus, dim. of carbo(n-), (live) coal.] Formerly, a red gem, as a ruby or garnet; now, a garnet cut in a convex rounded form without facets; also, a painful circumscribed inflammation of the subcutaneous tissue, resulting in suppuration and sloughing, and having a tendency to spread (somewhat like a boil, but more serious in its effects); also, an inflamed spot or pimple, as on the nose, due to intemperance. — car'-bun-cled, a. Set with carbuncles; afflicted with a carbuncle; spotted or pimpled; red or glowing like a carbuncle. — car-bun'cu-lar (-bung'kü-lär), a. Of or like a carbuncle; characterized by carbuncles; inflamed.

car-bu-rate (kär'bū-rät), v. t.; -rated, -rating. [See carburet.] To impregnate or mix with hydrocarbons, as the air in an internal-combustion engine. — car-bu-ra'tion (-rä'shön), n.

car-bu-ret (kär'bū-ret), n. [From carbon.] In chem., a carbide. — car'bu-ret, v. t.; -reted or -retted, -retting or -retting. To combine with carbon; impregnate or mix with hydrocarbons. — car'bu-ret-ant, n. A hydrocarbon used for carbureting. — car'bu-ret-er, car'bu-ret-or, n. Any of various devices for impregnating air or gas with hydrocarbons: used for making an explosive mixture in an internal-combustion engine, or for adding hydrocarbons to a non-luminous gas in making illuminating gas. — car-bu-re'tion (-re'shön), n. The act of carbureting; the process of impregnating air with volatile hydrocarbons in an internal-combustion engine.

car-bu-rize (kär'bū-riz), v. t.; -rized, -rizing. [F. carbure, a carbide, < carbone, E. carbon.] To combine with carbon. — car'bu-ri-za'tion (-ri-zä'shön), n. — car'bu-riz-er (-ri-zér), n.
